

(Washington, DC)— Congresswoman Gwen Moore (WI-04) will host an issue forum on the topic of community economic development on Saturday, September 9, as part of the Congressional Black Caucus (CBC) Annual Legislative Conference in Washington, D.C. Kwame Jackson, reality star from season one of Donald Trump's hit show, "The Apprentice," will be on hand to discuss strategies and practices used to spur real economic development activities in urban communities.

Also participating in the forum will be Margaret Henningsen, co-founder of Legacy Bancorp, the only bank holding company in the nation organized by African-American women, and Donet Graves, Jr., of the Urban Entrepreneur Partnership (UEP). Earlier this year, the city of Milwaukee was selected to become a member of the UEP, a national initiative designed to promote inner-city entrepreneurship and job growth.
